Bail reduced for alleged marathon bomb hoaxer

The 25-year-old man accused of running down Boylston Street on the anniversary of the Boston Marathon bombings carrying a large backpack with a glitter-filled rice cooker and screaming "Boston Strong" made an emotional appearance in court on Wednesday.

Kevin Edson of Wakefield broke down in tears during his first court appearance since undergoing a mental health evaluation. The judge reduced the $100,000 bail set on April 16 to $50,000,

Edson was also deemed competent to assist in his own defense.

The Massachusetts College of Art and Design student "has been battling mental issues for several years," according to his family's statement last month: "... His multiple mental health issues, including the diagnosis of bipolar disorder, are a constant battle realized by multiple hospitalizations and close psychiatric treatment."

He is due back in court on June 3. METRO

Union: Shots were 'direct attempt on their lives'

Shooting. Boston police said they are investigating the shots fired at two parking enforcement officers.

A pair of Boston parking enforcement officers are lucky to be alive after bullets whizzed past them, shattering the windshield of their van this week while they were out enforcing overnight street-cleaning restrictions in Dorchester.

"We believe this was a direct attempt on the lives of the officers in that van," said Jim Durkin, a spokesman for AFSCME Council 93, the union that represents nearly 200 of the city's parking officers.

The incident occurred at about 1 a.m. Tuesday on Washington Street as the parking officers were sitting inside their van. The driver heard a pop. At the same time, a bullet entered the van through the open driver's side window, narrowly missing his head. It shot through the van's windshield on the passenger side, sending glass flying into the eye of the female passenger.

The 22-year parking enforcement veteran was taken to Boston Medical Center where she was treated for glass in her eye and later released, Durkin said.

"Clearly things could have been a lot worse," said Durkin. "She's OK. [She's] very, very shaken up by this, as anyone would be."

Durkin said the parking officers had no interaction or confrontation with a person immediately before the shooting.

He said there are scores of other instances of attacks on parking enforcement officers, and that this week's apparent shooting was "extremely troubling."

Latest attack

Police investigating

Durkin, the union spokesman, said this week's apparent shooting was only the most recent example of the approximately 135 reported physical attacks on parking enforcement officers in the last eight years.

A Boston police spokeswoman said police are investigating the incident, but had no updates as of Wednesday afternoon.

"We have adopted within this local council a zero-tolerance policy for any assaults on parking enforcement officers," Durkin said. "We are going to insist on prosecution to the fullest extent of the law for any individual who attempts to hurt our members."

Man evaluated after DTX bomb threat

Parts of Downtown Crossing had to be evacuated on Wednesday due to the bomb threat. / NICOLAUS CZARNECKI, METRO

A 39-year-old man was transported to Mass General Hospital for a mental health evaluation on Wednesday after he allegedly made a bomb threat at the Downtown Crossing MBTA station.

MBTA officials said the man, who was not identified, allegedly walked into the station around 8:30 a.m. carrying a box, left it on the Orange Line's northbound platform, told a T employee that it contained a bomb and then walked away.

Transit police quickly detained the man, then gave the all-clear signal around 9:30 a.m. after their explosive detection unit discovered that the box did not contain harmful materials.

The investigation snarled the morning commute as authorities closed the station and interfered with Red and Orange line service. Authorities also evacuated a construction site and stores nearby.

When asked whether he would face charges, a T spokesman said the man was admitted to the hospital for an extended evaluation. METRO

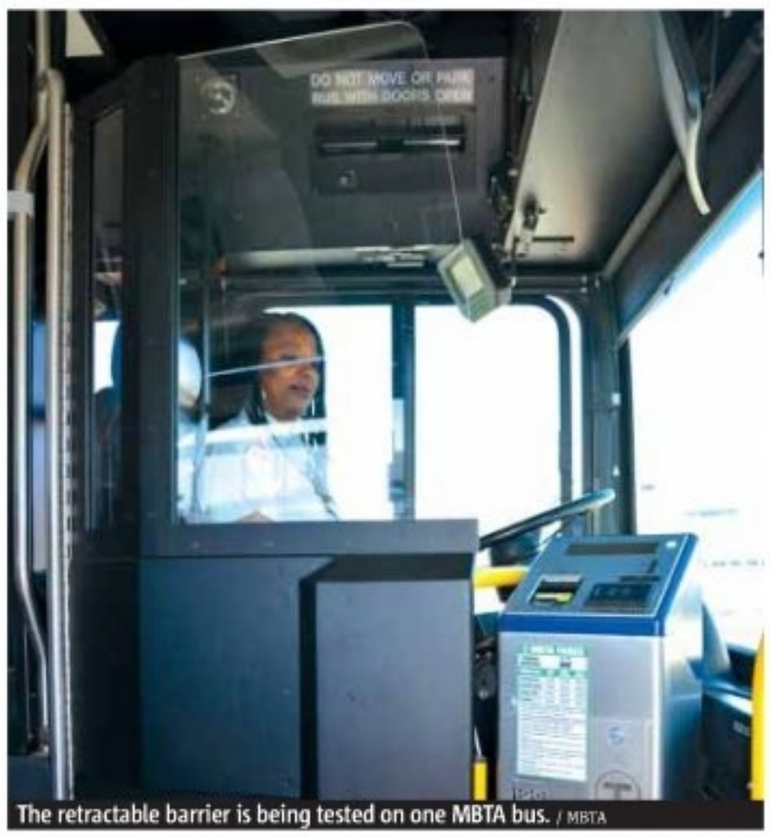
T tests bus barrier to protect drivers from assailants

Safety. T officials have said attacks on drivers won't be tolerated.



The retractable barrier is being tested on one MBTA bus. / MBTA

The MBTA has installed a protective plexiglass sliding barrier on one of its buses to see if it serves as an effective deterrent against assaults on its bus drivers.

At the request of T General Manager Beverly Scott, bus operations personnel designed a prototype of the barrier with the help of engineering staff from Arrow Corporation, a firm that is also working with the Metropolitan Transportation Authority in New York to install barriers on MTA buses. Scott said the bus with prototype will stay in service for a 90-day evaluation period.

During that time, several T drivers will operate the bus on multiple routes and provide their feedback. If the prototype does its job, protective barriers could become standard equipment on new buses purchased in the future.

Decision day for Boston, casinos

The Massachusetts Gaming Commission will likely decide today whether Boston is entitled to more benefits and a vote on casino projects proposed for neighboring cities.

The decisions were put off a week after it was revealed during a commission hearing last week that the city and at least Mohegan Sun were close to an agreement over the proposal for Suffolk Downs in Revere. A lawyer for Wynn Resorts in Everett said he was unaware of any progress.

Mayor Marty Walsh has argued that Boston is a host community to the two proposals. METRO

Tsarnaev. Lawyers want to nix death penalty

Defense attorneys for accused Boston Marathon bomber Dzhokhar Tsarnaev on Wednesday asked a federal judge to strike down the death penalty, calling it unconstitutional.

In court filings in U.S. District Court, Tsarnaev's attorneys pointed to the fact that execution is not permitted in Massachusetts, and said that the decision to attack the Marathon shouldn't be an "aggravating factor" in determining punishment.

They also argued that Tsarnaev may not have been indicted on 30 counts related to the bombing if the grand jury had anticipated he would be subjected to the death penalty if convicted.

Tsarnaev, 20, is being held at a Devens prison awaiting trial in the 2013 bombing, in which he and his late brother allegedly planted two bombs at the finish line, killing three and injuring more than 260. METRO

Governor's race

GOP offers Fisher ballot access

The Massachusetts Republican Party offered Wednesday to certify Republican gubernatorial hopeful Mark Fisher for the primary ballot in a bid to resolve a legal battle with the Shrewsbury businessman that a party lawyer said has become a "distraction" and a "drain on resources" for the GOP.

Fisher, a Tea Party Republican hoping to challenge the GOP's leading contender for governor, Charlie Baker, argues that he was unfairly denied access to the September primary ballot due to improper vote counting at the party's nominating convention.

The candidate has not responded to claims from the party's attorney that Fisher was demanding as much as $1 million in exchange for dropping the lawsuit. SHNS

Japanese retailer Uniqlo to open in Boston this July

Fashion sense. The casual wear designer, manufacturer and retailer out of Japan is headed to the Hub.

Japanese clothing retailer Uniqlo, which is known for its everyday wardrobe basics, is set to open six stores in the Greater Boston region, the company confirmed Wednesday.

A pop-up shop is expected to open at Faneuil Hall's South Market building in early July, with permanent locations to open later across Greater Boston, the Globe reported.

The company's U.S. CEO Larry Meyer released a statement Wednesday, saying the company was pleased to introduce the Uniqlo experience to Boston.

"Proud of their city's importance in American history and winning sports traditions, Bostonians have high expectations. We believe our everyday basics of exceptional value and functional apparel will delight them and contribute meaningfully to their lives," Meyer said.

The global retailer has more than 1,300 locations, including spots in New York, New Jersey, Connecticut and California.

Uniqlo is not the first major overseas retailer to recently announce its expansion to Boston. European retailer Primark said last month it will make its U.S. debut with a store at the former Filene's site in Boston in 2015.

New Hampshire court allows 'COPSLIE' vanity license plate

A New Hampshire man has the right to drive around the New England state with a license plate reading "COPSLIE," the state's top court ruled on Wednesday.

The state Supreme Court upheld a challenge to the New Hampshire Department of Motor Vehicles rules, finding they were unconstitutionally broad by allowing officials to deny requests for vanity license plates that "a reasonable person would find offensive to good taste."

The man, who in 2012 legally changed his name to "human" from David Montenegro, requested the plate in 2010 and sued the state when it denied his request, instead offering a plate with his second choice, "GR8GOVT."

The court ruled that rules based on standards of taste were too broad and therefore likely to be used arbitrarily or in a discriminatory fashion. REUTERS

Room to improve. Yellen says economy still needs help, housing poses a risk

Federal Reserve Bank Chairwoman Janet Yellen testifies before the Joint Economic Committee during a hearing entitled "The Economic Outlook" on Capitol Hill. / GETTY IMAGES

Concerns. Yellen said there can be potentially risky investment behavior given the extended period of low rates.

Federal Reserve Chairwoman Janet Yellen said on Wednesday the U.S. economy was still in need of lots of support given the "considerable slack" in the labor market, adding that the housing sector's weakness and geopolitical tensions also posed risks.

Even as she took note of "appreciable" improvements in the jobs market, Yellen told a congressional committee that the high rate of long-term unemployment and a slow rise in worker pay suggested plenty of room for further job gains. "A high degree of monetary accommodation remains warranted," she told the Joint Economic Committee.

Yellen said she expected the economy to expand at a "somewhat" faster pace than last year, but flagged weakness in the nation's housing sector and the possibility of heightened geopolitical tensions or the re-emergence of financial stress in emerging markets as potential risks.

U.S. stocks slipped after her testimony was released but later steadied, while prices for government debt were little changed. The dollar rose against a range of currencies.

Yellen expressed faith that at least part of the decline in labor force participation could be reversed. She also said she had very little doubt that the share of Americans working part-time because they could not find full-time work would also come down. REUTERS

'American Idol' runner-up. Clay Aiken leads in North Carolina Congress race

"American Idol" runner-up Clay Aiken held a narrow lead on Wednesday in his bid to become the Democratic nominee for a North Carolina congressional seat but could face a recount with a challenger who trails by fewer than 400 votes.

Aiken, 35, surpassed the 40 percent of votes needed to avoid a runoff, but North Carolina law allows for a recount when the spread between the top two finishers is 1 percent or less.

Crisco, 71, said the election remained too close to call but did not signal whether he would request a recount.

"This election is still very tight," he said. "I want the elections officials to have an opportunity to tally the votes and provide a report on their canvass activities to allow all the campaigns a chance to see the final numbers."

Aiken's campaign did not immediately comment on the results on Wednesday.

Aiken, who taught special education in North Carolina before his 2003 "Idol" appearance, earned respect from voters and pundits by proving knowledgeable about policy issues. He was outspent by Crisco, who ran four television ads compared to Aiken's one.

Putin calls on Ukraine rebels to put off vote

Russian President Vladimir Putin called on pro-Moscow separatists in Ukraine to postpone a vote on secession just five days before it was to be held, potentially pulling Ukraine back from the brink of violent dismemberment.

It was the first sign the Kremlin leader has given that he would not endorse a referendum planned for Sunday by pro-Russian rebels seeking independence for two provinces in the east, and Russian analysts said they believed the rebels would heed Putin's call to put off the vote.

In what could be a breakthrough in the worst crisis between East and West since the Cold War, Putin also announced he was pulling Russian troops back from the Ukrainian border.

However, NATO, the Pentagon and the White House said they had not seen any signs of a Russian pullback from the frontier, where Moscow has massed tens of thousands of troops, proclaiming the right to invade Ukraine to protect Russian speakers. REUTERS

Cyrus is back, y'all

Well, it looks like Miley's feeling better. / ALL PHOTOS GETTY IMAGES

Miley Cyrus proved to the world she is back and better than ever on Tuesday night at the O2 arena. The show marked the relaunch of her "Bangerz" tour after she had to cancel several shows due to an allergic reaction that landed her in the hospital for more than a week.

And yes, it really was an allergic reaction.

"I didn't have a drug overdose," she confirmed, yet again, at a Tuesday press conference before the show. "I took some ... antibiotics that a doctor gave me for a sinus infection, and I had a reaction."

She claimed she's all better now. "I'm feeling good, I'm alive — so that's f—king awesome. I'm the poster child for good health." She's even taken drastic steps to maintain it: "I'm on this crazy vitamin rush and crazy honey and lavender. I learned a lot about taking care of myself," she explained. "I'm probably the only one on this tour who doesn't drink or smoke before a show, as I take this really seriously. It's almost like being an athlete up here, because if someone was f—ed up, they definitely couldn't do my show."

If the above photo is any indication, it looks like Cyrus is back to her old antics. Lily Allen certainly thought so. "That was basically the best thing I've ever seen #BangerzTour #MileyCyrus," Allen tweeted, along with a string of happy emojis.

Clooney's wedding will be very soon

Clooney and Alamuddin.

Does anyone else feel like Clooney's quickie engagement to Amal Alamuddin is because of a baby Clooney in the oven?

It was just so quick, and now there are reports that the two are wasting no time in tying the knot, with a fast-approaching wedding date, according to Radar Online.

"The wedding is to take place in September," a source says. "They've told family and friends they will only disclose the location at the last minute, and it will be very private. Neither George nor Amal want the wedding to be a public affair — and her family doesn't either."

Then again, celebrities these days don't have to get married if they're expecting. It's not 1950s-era Hollywood. Clooney would have to do worse than have a child out of wedlock to harm his reputation. Probably, like, kick a puppy or something. Even then, the housewives of America would probably forgive him.

2 'Legends of Oz: Dorothy's Return'
If you think an animated film boasting Dan Aykroyd, Jim Belushi and Martin Short released by a small studio with animation that looks like cut-scenes from 1990s video games is some quickie cash-in on "Oz the Great and Powerful," think again! (Or don't.)

3 'Moms' Night Out'
Another stealthily religion-driven mainstream opus, this comedy finds mothers Sarah Drew and Patricia Heaton getting into crazy but very PG-rated danger, with wild cards like Sean Astin and Trace Adkins thrown in.

4 'Belle'
The obscure story of Dido Elizabeth Belle (Gugu Mbatha-Raw), an heiress of mixed race who struggled to navigate 18th century England, gets a very Jane Austen-style movie, albeit one that slips politics in among the courting.

What you'll see

'Neighbors'

1 Seth Rogen is getting old (OK, he's 32), which means it's time for him to square off against the younger generation, namely as a new dad peeved at the frat that's moved in next door, led by young kid Zac Efron (OK, he's 26).

5 'Locke'
Hope you like Tom Hardy, because he's the only person in this drama. He plays a construction foreman negotiating his way out of kerfuffles via endless phone calls made from his car.

6 'For No Good Reason'
The great cartoonist Ralph Steadman — best known for his work on Hunter S. Thompson books — gets his own documentary, one revolving around him receiving a visit from serial Thompson impersonator Johnny Depp.

7 'Fed Up'
The latest documentary that tells you everything you're doing will kill you, this takes a critical look at the food industry and how its products are actually making us sick.

8 'The Amazing Spider-Man 2'
The second in a reboot of a franchise that happened only last decade deviates from the originals, having Andrew Garfield's Spidey fight Electro (Jamie Foxx) and — oh wait, Green Goblin (Dane DeHaan) is here too. That's not new.

'We are such stuff as dreams are made on'

Shakespeare. Teller makes "The Tempest" even more magical.

For the magician who goes by the name of Teller, staging a magical version of Shakespeare's "The Tempest" is a dream come true, literally.

"Somewhere in the 1970s — 1979, I think — I bought one of those books about how to remember your dreams," he recounts. "And I was writing them down, and one of the dreams that really sticks with me was one where I dreamed I was Prospero on this island and I was fighting my enemies by means of magic and that actually was something of revelation to me."

Teller, the nonverbal half of Penn and Teller, is anything but reserved in conversation, especially when it comes to this production, more than 35 years in the making. His excitement is palpable as he discusses how all of the elements came together — his own professional life of creating illusions, the words of the Bard, the complementary interests of co-adaptor and co-director Aaron Posner, the music of Tom Waits and Kathleen Brennan, the elaborate choreography of Pilobolus and David Charvet's book about a traveling magic troupe called "Willard: A Life Under Canvas."

"Tom saw a picture of Willard's band and the picture is black and white of five or six people on a truck bed stage with a canvas background. They all look like typical Depression-era people, their clothes somewhat loose because they've been hungry for a long time," says Teller. "There's a woman at the side of the stage and because there is no modern electrification, she is holding an old-style megaphone to her mouth and shouting at the audience. Tom looks at this picture and says, 'These are my people.'"

Quoted

"It's harder in some regards, but in other regards it frames the stuff so much it's automatically the dramatic, kinetic, chilling, hair-raising meaning that magicians go for, because Shakespeare has already provided that for us."

Teller, on raising the stakes by adding magic to drama

‘Comedy Bang Bang’ gets serious

See more at www.metro.us

Interview. Scott Aukerman tells us how politicians and the dead could spice up his show and other banging plans for the future.

As “Comedy Bang Bang” begins its third season, the creators of the show are still trying out new things. Watch host Scott Aukerman awkwardly (yet hilariously) interview such stars as Fred Armisen, Lizzy Caplan and Patton Oswalt in the new season. Aukerman answered a few questions about what changes viewers can expect.

Who would your dream guest be?
The whole first season I would get that question. I would say Pee-wee Herman all the time and he ended up being on the show because of that, so I’m going to throw out some random people and hope they are Googling their names. Definitely David Letterman. I think Martin Short is another person that I’ve been trying for three years to get on that I would love to interview because I think he’s just the funniest human. And I think Joe Biden. I think dead people. I’d love for dead people to start coming back to life, because there’s a whole bunch of them. Plato.

You’re cornering the market on dead guests.
I would love to just talk to dead people exclusively at some point. We’ll run out of living people. I mean, there’s not too many celebrities left, right?

It’s your third season. You must be running short on people.
We’re running out of people. We have 40 more shows to do for Season 4. They need to start making new celebrities. I’m going to start watching Disney shows and try to get people when they’re 6 or 7. Get ‘em early before they get famous and decide they don’t want to do the show.

If you did get Joe Biden, what would you have him do?
If Joe Biden came on the show, I think we’d probably make an election special, even though the election’s still a little while away. Do you think he’s going to run? I think we would try to get him to announce his candidacy on our show. That’s what we really need on our show: a serious politician. I’d love to switch it up and instead of doing goofy silly questions, just ask serious, direct questions about policy.

Fixes for your summer hair care issues

PLUS
Swimming
'I want to protect my hair from chlorine.'
'If you spray something that has SPF in it, that helps protect your hair from fading and also from getting dehydrated from the sun. If your hair is hydrated and healthy, it keeps the color longer. If you're going to swim, take a bottle of water and put it on your hair first — saturate it — and then go in the pool. If your hair is already saturated with water, the chlorine won't be the first thing to hit your hair. The chlorine will kind of sit on top and won't penetrate [and] go deep into changing the color,' Hazan says.

Heat. Dry? Brassy? Chlorinated? Rita Hazan's advice will help.

Summer's the ultimate time to let your hair down — but you won't want to if you're facing some funky summer hair issues such as brittleness or faded, wonky color. We tapped Rita Hazan, who works with Beyonce, Katy Perry and other A-listers, for her advice on all your warm-weather hair care woes.

'My hair gets brassy during the summer.'

"Over time, brassiness happens; it doesn't matter what color you use [or] what you're doing to your hair. You'll have to do something to counteract any environmental problems that occur. The best way to prevent brassiness is to put a gloss on your hair. I have a product called Breaking Brass — use it the first time you wash your hair after you color [and] every time you wash your hair. This is gonna be the new way to take care of your hair: Shampoo, gloss, condition. Use this every time, [and] you'll prevent any kind of brassiness. If you haven't done the gloss and it's brassy already, then just start using the gloss from now on, and it will help eliminate some of the yellow-orangey tone."

'My hair feels gross after a day at the pool.'

"Use a treatment. That same night, shampoo your hair, use a treatment, sleep with it in and rinse it out in the morning. [Get] a mask — anything [labeled] 'hydrating' [or] 'moisturizing.'"

'I want to go lighter, but I don't know how to choose highlights that will look good on me.'

"Stay in the same color range, just go maybe two to three shades lighter. If [currently] you're buying 'Golden Blonde,' buy 'Light Golden Blonde' color. It's going to get lighter in the sun, too, so start out a little bit darker and let it naturally do its thing. [And] always use a shampoo and conditioner for color-treated hair."

'My hair feels like straw.'

"Even if you wear a hat, summer in the sun and exposure to chlorine and salt water dehydrate your hair. When [your] hair feels dry, it's dehydrated. Regularly use a conditioning treatment or an oil, and you won't have that dehydrated feeling."

BRO POWERED 6/5
I owe you!
Hi
Hey what are you up to tonight?
Miss you :)
Love you more than Jimmy Fallon.
Guess what?
What a day, how was yours?
Do you love your significant other more than Jimmy Fallon? Let him or her know via BroApp. / PROVIDED

BroApp. A new app texts sweet nothings to your significant other when you can't.

Couples everywhere know that text frequency is a sensitive issue, but BroApp, which just launched on iOS, lets users schedule automatic texts to significant others so they won't get in trouble.

BroApp isn't just for bros: Creators Tom and James, who declined to give their surnames, say that 10 percent of their users are women. Though BroApp is from Australia, half of the app's users are American and the majority of users are between 18 and 24 years.

How did you come up with the idea for the app?
Tom: I came up with the idea when I was living with James. I was working long hours at work and you couldn't use your mobile phone in my office, and it wasn't very accommodating to the girlfriend. I was talking to James about it and a light bulb moment happened and we thought, "Why don't we set up an automatic text messenger and send, 'Hey, how is your day?' messages to my girlfriend?" We tested that for a few months and it's quite a unique app that was useful.
James: We built a prototype first, and that worked really well, but we didn't decide to make it into a product until we told people we made this app. It had a lot of social currency and people found it funny.

See more at www.metro.us

Tom: It's just sort of to start the communication with the girlfriend so there's still communication during the day. It wasn't necessarily to message your girlfriend so you never have to talk to her. The idea was that it sends an initial text to start a conversation, so it's more of a reminder than your relationship automated.

But why do you need an app to do that? Why can't you just remember to text your girlfriend?
Tom: [Laughs] We were always so busy at work or couldn't use the phone.

What kind of problems did you run into in beta testing?
James: We started off with a really basic version that would simply just look at when Tom disconnected from his work Wi-Fi and send a message when that event occurred, so if Tom walked out of work and walked back in and walked out again, the original version sent texts each time Tom walked out. It wasn't time-based; it was location-based. I think that put you in a few tricky situations, didn't it, Tom?
Tom: Yeah, yeah. I'd just say, "Sorry about my phone — it's been playing up lately." She never caught on, so that was a good sign.

How did you come up with the messages?
James: We wrote those messages based on what we actually texted to our girlfriends. I guess we didn't really think so, but what happened was a lot of Australianisms crept in there, so we caught a lot of flak on social media. We were using "darl" and "sweety" and "bird" and signing off with "x."
Tom: That's why we only intended those default messages as examples. People can edit them to their own sort of language.
James: You can edit the existing messages and words you don't use. Some people have edited the "x" to the kiss with the asterisks. I understand that — and expect that anyone other than perhaps our girlfriends would be suspicious of the default messages. It's almost impossible to come up with messages that are cross-cultural and cross-relationship, etc., so from the beginning it was baked in that you could edit the messages and add your own.

It sounds like you could really use it to text anyone you need to text occasionally, then.
James: My brother uses it to text my mom. When I told her about BroApp and an extension called MomApp, she was very annoyed and said she'd be outraged — but I don't know if she knows my brother uses it.

ANDREA PARK

Yo, bro

About the name

James: Bro isn't normally used as a positive term. We call it brah, like a self-deprecatory thing. We chose that so people didn't take it as seriously. We're aware of how people perceive it. ... It was a deliberate choice.

Real life

Testing, testing

What did your girlfriend do when she found out you had been testing this app on her?
Tom: She was a bit shocked at first, but then she just realized how much I loved her.

So it was a labor of love?
Tom: It was.

THE EVOLUTION OF POST-ROCK BAD BOYS

Yes, Mogwai were named after the adorable little creature in "Gremlins." And they're adorable little creatures themselves, or at least "lovable scamps," aren't they? / STEVE GULLICK

Rock democracy. Mogwai were once a "here for the beer" band, but they've matured over the years into dignified post-rock statesmen.

Scottish post-rock band Mogwai aren't much for words, but the instrumental post-rockers' "Rave Tapes," released in January, includes a spoken-word passage alleging that there are satanic ciphers in Led Zeppelin's lyrics. It's a rerecorded but earnest warning from a Christian broadcast, whose announcer overlooked that singer Robert Plant was more into hobbits and hedgerows than the devil.

"Yeah, he's actually singing about hobbits," multi-instrumentalist John Cummings says, laughing. "There's plenty in Led Zeppelin's music that's ridiculous; you don't have to make up stuff."

Why sample something about Led Zep's penchant for the dark side at all? Well, once upon a time, Mogwai were known as bad boys of rock, mostly for the decibel-pushing volume of the band's instrumental epics, which had critics who saw their live shows fearing for their eardrums.

"We were young once," Cummings says, not without irony. "[Back then,] we just enjoyed what seemed like a lot of free beer. I don't think we're like that anymore. On the whole, we were just lovable scamps."

Over eight albums, Mogwai has preferred to make statements solely with their music rather than with, well, statements, i.e., lyrics. But considering they're scoring the European TV series "Les Revenants" and the "Zidane" biopic, lyrics or no lyrics, Mogwai have clearly grown up into dignified, post-rock elder statesmen.

"We're as much the last men standing as anything else. We just managed to keep going," Cummings says. "It seems strange that not more bands manage it. Hopefully, over time, you get to know how not to annoy other people as much as they get to know how not to annoy you. It's not that difficult to put up with each other, really."

That attitude applies to the band's music, too. Not having a vocalist or a lead guitarist or a dominating musical element has left Mogwai leaderless and truly democratic, creatively. Such flexibility has allowed the band to not only continue, but also evolve.

"In the beginning there was malleability in various areas because we were clueless," Cummings says.

He says "clueless," but it seems more like they were wise enough to listen to each other.

Cummings isn't so sure about that theory and has a more common-sense explanation.

"That's sounds a bit grandiose," he says. "If you don't know what you're doing and someone else does, then, yeah, follow them."

Detroit native Sixto Rodriguez put out a couple of great folk rock albums in the '70s to little fanfare, but years later he discovered, much to his surprise, that he'd become an anti-establishment cult hero south of the equator. The release of an Oscar-winning 2012 documentary, "Searching for Sugar Man," finally won him the fame at home that had eluded him for decades.

EMA are the initials of industrial pop diva Erika M. Anderson. Though it's always been cool in indie music to sing without a trace of emotion, Anderson's vocals, sometimes the only truly melodic presence in the monstrous machine landscape of her music, have the drama turned up to 11 — it's the sound of humanity drowning ecstatically in its own technological fever dream. DAY DRINK YOUR WAY TO A HAPPY MOTHER'S DAY

LUKE O'NEIL

@LUKEONEIL47

Metro does not endorse the opinions of the author.

Everyone celebrates Mother's Day differently. Some go home to visit mom, where she then proceeds to cook and clean for them just like in the good old days. Others, like me, give our mothers the gift of agreeing to not talk about politics for the day. But if there's one thing that stretches across generations, it's the age-old ritual of drinking cocktails until we're relaxed enough to talk to one another. I asked a few bartenders serving Mother's Day brunch this weekend what they'd suggest for mom.

Canary Square's (435 S. Huntington Ave., Jamaica Plain, www.canarysquare.com) Angela Lamb's offering hews more toward the light, effervescent side, with a cava-based cocktail called the Spring Rose that's mixed with rose water, rhubarb and lemon. "All moms like flowers and sparkly things," she says. "This is a bright, refreshing and sparkling cocktail that all moms can enjoy."

Sam Gabrielli at Russell House Tavern (14 John F. Kennedy St., Cambridge, www.russellhousecambridge.com) has a cocktail that's evocative of the spring, which, we're told, is technically supposed to be arriving any day now. His In the Weeds winks at the old restaurant saying about being swamped with things on your plate. "Moms are in the weeds 24/7," he says. The cocktail is made with Zubrowka, a bison grass-flavored vodka that's sweet and aromatic. He adds dry vermouth and lemon juice to brighten things up even further.

"The smooth and refreshing In the Weeds is a great cocktail for moms because of the lemongrass and warm spicy flavors of Zubrowka," he says. "Everything is a little more placid when sipping on this cocktail."

Estelle's (782 Tremont St., Boston, www.estellesboston.com) in the South End has a cocktail called Smoke on the Water. Jen LaForge plays with the balance of smoky and sweet here, using St. Germain, apple mead, mezcal, lemon juice, honey syrup and Peychaud's bitters. "Moms will enjoy this cocktail because it's subtly sweet and smoky, making for a refreshing, celebratory libation," she says. It's something well-deserved for most mothers this time of year.

Nearby, Coda Bar & Kitchen (329 Columbus Ave, Boston, www.codaboston.com) has another play on the light, crisp, fruit-forward sparkling wine style cocktail that mothers seem to enjoy with their Yummy Mummy. Shauna Hamilton starts with cava, then adds limoncello, ginger liqueur and peach puree, and garnishes it with fresh berries for bold color. "My mother would love this springtime sipper," she says. "It's fresh, fruity and quite pleasant to look at. Though my mom and I could throw back quite a few on Mother's Day, this is also perfect for a mom who sticks to the single cocktail rule and wants to make it a good one. Warning: She may become giddy afterward."

Mum's the word

Tavern Road

At Tavern Road (343 Congress St., www.tavernroad.com), Ryan McGrale serves up the Cool but Rude, which combines tequila, Campari, coconut creme, honey, ginger and lemon juice. "Just like your mother, the Cool but Rude pulls no punches," he says. "It's pink, layered, unafraid — a mother-like cocktail."

The Seattle-based poet will read from her latest collection, "Cloud Pharmacy," partially inspired by the work of Hannah Maynard, an early experimental photographer fond of duplicating images of herself in the same shot, as if to show the several sides of her personality. Rich accomplishes a similar effect in her poems, conveying the unique person beneath the everyday meandering of the mind.

Cool the debate on global warming

Re: 'The sand's getting hot, so don't bury your head in it' (Metro, May 7) Letter writer Carl Hanson needs not be confused about the climate confusion. The main argument is about the cause, not about the existence of global warming. One side says that it is mostly man-made and we should take steps to minimize our contribution to it. The other side claims that it is natural cycle of our planet's warming and cooling, completely outside of our ability to do anything about it.
VLADO HALUSKA, VIA EMAIL

Not a single major U.S. science organization denies anthropogenic climate change. Even the American Association of Petroleum Geologists (see the conflict of interest?) only quibbles about the extent. Skepticism is an important part of science, but the debate is over, and the "free press" argument is inane. You may choose to willfully ignore the evidence if you like, but giving equal time to climate-change deniers – when 97 percent of climate scientists agree that human impact on climate is serious – isn't responsible journalism.
ORI FIENBERG, VIA EMAIL

Re: 'Climate cha-ching!' (Metro, April 30) To letter writer Pat Dougherty, who claims, "All this climate change nonsense is about one thing: MONEY!": Refute the scientific evidence with logic to support your claim that high-ranking scientists don't know what they're talking about. "Pockets are being lined, mostly liberal" is broad-brush nonsense. Exacerbated hurricanes, tornadoes, floods, wildfires and landslides are hitting conservatives, liberals and the nonaligned all alike. That the Earth has natural cycles doesn't cancel out that what humans do also changes environmental chemistry, and therefore function. The human contribution is added to whatever natural cycle, worsening the total effect.

2014 NFL Mock Draft | by Matt Burke

No. 1

Texans (2-14)

Jadeveon Clowney, DE, South Carolina — After months and months of speculation as to who would be drafted No. 1 overall, the same thing most everyone thought a year ago at this time is true: Clowney is the best player in this draft. There was a late push from the Falcons to move up to nab Clowney after they put him through a newfangled test — the Force Plate Test. Atlanta was testing whether a great athlete such as Clowney would be susceptible to a major injury. He passed the test with flying colors, adding another reason for the Texans to stand pat.

No. 2

Rams (7-9)

Greg Robinson, OT, Auburn — There's a late push for wide receiver Sammy Watkins at this spot to give Sam Bradford a legit weapon, but head coach Jeff Fisher historically prefers substance over flash. The Rams goes with the sure thing.

No. 3

Jaguars (4-12)

No. 4

Browns (4-12)

Johnny Manziel, QB, Texas A&M — One of the more recent rumors was that the Rams were interested in Manziel. Maybe if he falls to St. Louis at 13, but it's highly unlikely that the Browns, Raiders and Vikings will pass on Johnny Football.

No. 5

Raiders (4-12)

Jake Matthews, OT, Texas A&M — The "Raiders Way" hasn't worked since George W. Bush's first term. The old Raiders would've taken Sammy Watkins here. This pick will show a lot about the direction of the franchise.

No. 6

Falcons (4-12)

No. 7

Bucs (4-12)

Sammy Watkins, WR, Clemson— Lovie Smith brought in a pair of defensive tackles in Tommie Harris and Tank Johnson in his first draft with Chicago. But the Bucs' need at receiver appears too great for Smith to go defense.

No. 8

Vikings (5-10-1)

Teddy Bridgewater, QB, Louisville — Blake Bortles is the new "it guy" for most Vikings fans, but every team can't be down on Bridgewater. There's a chance the Vikings trade down and still select Bridgewater, but this team can't take risks.

No. 9

Bills (6-10)

Taylor Lewan, OT, Michigan — The Bills are likely to take the best available offensive lineman and in this case, it would be Lewan. The Michigan product would give the Bills' offense a nasty demeanor.

No. 10

Lions (7-9)

Justin Gilbert, CB, Oklahoma State — The Lions need a cornerback with the ability to make big plays. Gilbert picked off the likes of RGIII, Ryan Tannehill and Andrew Luck during his time at Oklahoma State. Gilbert could be the game-changer Detroit needs.

No. 11

Titans (7-9)

Kyle Fuller, CB, Virginia Tech — Many mocks are going with quarterback Derek Carr here for the Titans, but Tennessee could still grab the Fresno State QB late in the first or early in the second through a trade.

No. 12

Giants (7-9)

Zack Martin, G, Notre Dame — The Giants will likely look to the offensive side of the ball here, but the real question is, "How do they want to help Eli Manning?" A receiver or tight end is tempting, but Martin would be a safe pick.

No. 13

Rams (7-9)

Ha Ha Clinton-Dix, S, Alabama — Clinton-Dix's NFL.com draft profile says "the hype exceeded his performance in Tuscaloosa." It also says he will be a "Day 1 starter." The Rams simply need NFL-caliber bodies in the secondary right now.

Stanley Cup playoffs

Bruins seek to tie series in Game 4

With the way the first three games of Bruins-Canadiens have unfolded, it's easy to forget that the Bruins earned the Presidents' Trophy in the 2013-14 regular season. The B's have led for a grand total of 11.5 minutes through three games while the Canadiens have been in front for 107 minutes. In many ways, Boston is lucky to only be down 2-1 in the series, heading into the all-important Game 4 on Thursday (7:30 p.m., NBCSN) at the Bell Centre.

"They played a better game [in Game 3] than they did in Boston," said Bruins head coach Claude Julien about the Canadiens following the 4-2 loss. "We need to rebound and make sure we're ready at the start of the game."

The team that has scored first has won each game of the series so far.

Bruins defenseman Dennis Seidenberg told The Boston Globe that he is "feeling better" and that he could "probably play right now." The Bruins have not entirely ruled out the possibility that Seidenberg could play this postseason.
